DATA RECORDER FROM SUNKEN CARGO SHIP EL FARO RECOVERED

The data recorder from the cargo ship El Faro, which sank near the Bahamas during a Caribbean hurricane last October, has been recovered, offering possible answers about why the vessel went down, the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board said on Tuesday. The device, found late on Monday on the ocean floor after 10 months of searching, could provide navigational data and communications between crew members that could help determine what happened in the final hours before the 790-foot ship sank, officials said. REUTERS

US APPROVES $1.15B SALE OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT TO SAUDI ARABIA

The State Department has approved the potential sale of more than 130 Abrams battle tanks, 20 armored recovery vehicles and other equipment, worth about $1.15 billion, to Saudi Arabia, the Pentagon said. The approval for land force equipment comes at a time when Saudi Arabia is leading a military coalition in support of Yemeni forces loyal to the exiled government of President Abd-Rabbu Mansour Hadi who are trying to oust Iran-allied Houthi forces from the capital, Sanaa. The coalition's air strikes have come under criticism from rights groups for the deaths of civilians. The U.S. Defense Security Cooperation Agency, which oversees foreign arms sales, said that General Dynamics will be the principal contractor for the sale, adding it would contribute to U.S. national security by improving the security of a regional partner. REUTERS

US JUDGE UPHOLDS 14-YEAR SENTENCE FOR EX-ILLINOIS GOVERNOR

A federal judge on Tuesday upheld the 14-year prison sentence for ex-Illinois Gov. Rod Blagojevich despite his emotional plea for leniency after an appeals court set aside part of his public corruption conviction. U.S. District Court Judge James Zagel ruled Blagojevich must remain in a Colorado prison, siding with the demand by prosecutors that he serve out his original, full term through 2024. "I am sympathetic to ... how painful this situation is to them," Zagel said, referring to Blagojevich's family. "But as I said four years ago, the fault lies with the governor." Seeking a five-year sentence that would enable him to leave prison quickly, Blagojevich, 59, apologized for his wrongdoing and the way he "fought back" against the government. REUTERS

Cambridge gets the gold in childhood obesity prevention

City achieved highest ranking for goals aimed at promoting healthy nutrition and physical activity.

The kids of Cambridge are making healthy choices, making the city among the best in the nation at preventing childhood obesity, according to a release from the Cambridge Public Health Department.

As part of the National League of Cities' Let's Move! Cities, Towns and Counties Initiative — a subset of first lady Michelle Obama's Let's Move! campaign — Cambridge has earned a "gold medal" ranking in each of the five goals.

Among those are implementing better nutrition and physical activity practices into early child care and education programs; improving access to healthy and affordable foods at municipal- or county-owned venues; and having local officials launch policies to increase access to play spaces.

Cambridge was among 74 communities nationwide, including two others in Massachusetts, Somerville and New Bedford, to earn gold medals across the board from the Cities, Towns and Counties Initiative.

"Reducing childhood obesity has been a long-

City Manager Richard C. Rossi said in a statement. "She inspired us to pursue environmental and policy strategies that extended beyond our public schools and parks."

In 2015, 31 percent of Cambridge public school students from kindergarten to eighth grade were overweight or obese, down from 39 percent in 2004, according to data collected by the school department.

Cambridge joined the Let's Move! campaign in 2011, but has focused on promoting healthy weight for decades. A team of public health professionals, civic leaders, city staff, parent activists and the Cambridge Public Schools began initiating healthy policies in the

"Our family lives in Cambridge because we can walk, bike or ride the T just about anywhere, and because of the great food culture — from grocery options to restaurants to farmers markets and school gardens," Kim Motylewski, a Cambridge resident and manager of the Cambridge Winter Farmers Market, said online. STOLEN COP CAR FOUND

Stolen police cruiser recovered in Somerville
Grand Theft Auto: Boston?

State police said a cruiser stolen from a state Department of Transportation maintenance facility in South Boston was recovered in Somerville on Monday afternoon.

Department spokesman David Procopio told the Associated Press that the car was taken from the yard at some point Monday morning, before it was located later that day at the Twin City Plaza parking lot around 12:45 p.m.

The vehicle was reportedly being serviced for engine trouble and didn't contain any weapons. Nothing else was taken from the cruiser, CBS Boston reported.

The cruiser was not assigned to any specific trooper and is used as a temporary replacement for troopers whose regular cars are out of service, WCVB reported.

Authorities said the vehicle was not damaged. CHRIS CAESAR

Mass. voters get another choice for US president

Former Gov. William Weld turns in signatures qualifying Libertarian ticket for ballot.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Massachusetts voters officially have more options when casting their presidential ballots in November.

On Monday, former Gov. William Weld delivered thousands of voter signatures to the state elections office to qualify the Libertarian ticket for the ballot.

Weld and former New Mexico Gov. Gary Johnson plan to take the third-party path to the White House. Weld told reporters on Monday that "the ice is cracking a little bit."

"Just this week, I've spoken with a few Republican members of Congress who are interested in reassessing their endorsements for the fall," Weld said, according to The Boston Globe.

In order to make the ballot, a party must have 10,000 signatures. Weld's delivery of signatures Monday pushed the Libertarian party over that threshold with a total of 12,587 signatures, according to Brian McNiff, communications director for the Office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The Libertarian ticket currently polls at about 8 percent in surveys that include presidential candidates Donald Trump, Hillary Clinton and the Green Party's Jill Stein.

The GOP has already submitted the paperwork for Trump and vice presidential candidate Mike Pence to appear on the Massachusetts ballot. The Green Party and the Democratic Party have until Sept. 1 to qualify, according to the Globe.

"We have a path to run right up the middle and win the whole thing here," Weld said. "But Libertarians never tell other people what to do. So if anyone in the commonwealth wants to waste their vote by casting it for Trump or Clinton, it's OK with us."

EAR TODAY, GONE TOMORROW

Cops: Drunk woman, 19, bites off piece of policewoman's ear

A Salem police officer will need reconstructive surgery after an allegedly drunk teen bit off a piece of her ear during a violent confrontation early Sunday.

Emma Wiley, 19, of Marblehead was held after a Salem Court judge found her too dangerous to release on bail.

She faces charges of mayhem, assault and battery causing serious bodily injury, resisting arrest, assault and battery on a police officer, threatening to commit a crime, disorderly conduct and having a false identification, according to a statement from the Essex District Attorney's Office.

Authorities said that Wiley bit off a piece of Patrolwoman Jessica Rondinelli's right ear while officers were placing her in the backseat of their cruiser after a disturbance outside a Salem restaurant.

Fox 25 identified the restaurant as Tavern in the Square.

Rondinelli, reportedly a recent graduate of the police academy, also told the network that Wiley "made numerous spontaneous threats about how she was going to have every one of us cops killed."

Wiley is due in court Aug. 30. CHRIS CAESAR

One Simple Trick That Reverses Memory Loss By 12 Years

Memory loss affects all of us as we age. We lose focus, concentration and the ability to remember simple things like names, faces, or where we placed things. But that's all about to change...

Reverse Memory Loss: Lipogen PS can reduce stress and reverse memory loss, improving focus and mental clarity.

By Steven Wuzubia
Health Correspondent;

Clearwater, Florida; Scientists at Kaplan Hospital studied 149 people aged 50 to 75 who were suffering from memory loss. They gave half the people this nutrient and half a placebo. After just 3 months, ALL the people taking this nutrient had significant improvements in memory and learning.

These results were so impressive, the researchers decided to look further. They found that after 12 weeks, the people taking this nutrient had an easier time concentrating, remembering telephone numbers, and finding misplaced objects.

Study Proves This Cuts 12 Years Off Your "Brain Age"

In fact, while the average age of the participants was 64, their "brain age" tested at 52. This means they tested as if they were 12 years younger!

There are 61 other clinical trials and 2,800 research papers showing this nutrient helps improve memory, attention, verbal fluency, and overall mental function.

These dramatic memory improvements have been proven by double-blind, placebo controlled clinical studies at leading universities and published in medical journals including The Journal of Neurology and Neurobiology of Aging.

End Your "Senior Moments", Worry, Embarrassment, Danger

I know it's scary ... your memory is slipping ... and you fear losing your mind, losing your independence, forgetting everything; even your children's names, being a burden to your loved ones.

You fear not being able to drive a car, not being able to play with your grandchildren without adult supervision, or being put into a nursing home against your will.

A new natural breakthrough will not only help STOP your memory loss, but can REVERSE IT, so you can remember as good as you did long ago, and strengthen your mind ... before it's too late.

This new breakthrough goes WAY BEYOND "the basics" of just taking a multi-vitamin with "memory support". These do NOT work because they do NOT contain this nutrient or a high enough dosage of it to work.

All-Natural Solution Discovered

Scientists have discovered that as you get older, your brain cells die off and become dysfunctional. In fact, Georgia Tech University reports a person's memory declines by as much as 40% between the age of 25 and 65.

The sneaky thief that robs your memory is the loss of the nutrient phosphatidylserine (PS). Your brain needs to replace this lost key nutrient to work its best, like when you were younger.

This nutrient is in a supplement called Lipogen PS Plus. "This is pure memory fuel. In just days, you'll feel more alert, absorb new information faster and recall it immediately," says Meir Shinitzky PhD.

"This is 'the missing link' scientists have been seeking for years. "You fill up your gas tank when it is low. Doesn't your brain and memory deserve the same?"

Help For These 17 Memory Problems

This nutrient gives your brain what it has been missing. It gives you the essence of "new brain cells" to overcome these memory problems.

People's Names. Dates. Directions. Appointments. Where you left your eyeglasses. Where you left your car keys. A phone number. An event or the time of it. Worry about your memory and "losing your mind". Something cooking in the oven. Leaving the dog outside. Leaving your grandchild in the bathtub. Trouble finding the exact words you want to say. Why you came into a room. "Mental fog" causing you to make a bad decision. If you took your medicine or not.

Your life will improve soon when you NO LONGER have these memory problems. You can soon think faster, remember more, have clearer thinking, and enjoy life to the fullest.

PS is THE ONLY natural health supplement that has a "qualified health claim for effectiveness for both cognitive dysfunction and dementia by the U.S. Food And Drug Administration (FDA).

It helps reduce everyday stress and elevate your mood. PS lowers your body's production of the hormone cortisol. When these levels are too high, you experience fatigue, sadness and stress.

You can soon be clear-headed like you used to be - with your memory sharp as a tack. You will feel better, younger, happier than you have in many years.

Now you can remember birthdays and anniversaries. Impress your friends with a sharper mind. Make more friends. Be more popular. Be better at having conversations. Remember events, jokes and stories.

A better brain will make you more valuable to your employer. Impress your boss and fellow workers. You could get an extra promotion or raise.

"My fog has lifted"

"This has caused my mental fog to be lifted, replaced by clear thinking, memory recall, the ability to focus and renewed vitality."

Nicholina H., West Palm Beach, FL

Woman hoping to open Boston cat cafe signs lease

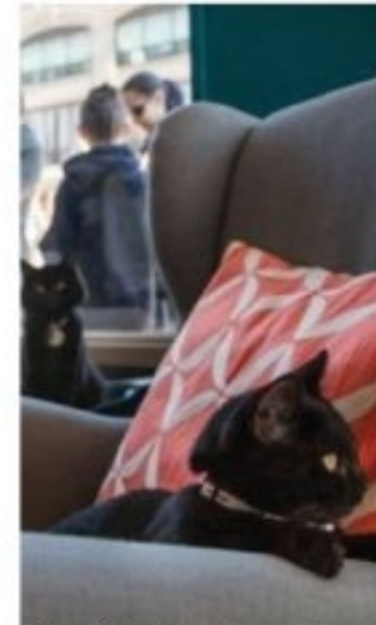

If you build it ... they will purr.

That's the hope of one Boston-area entrepreneur, who said that her plans to open the city's first cat café took a step forward this month, after she signed a lease for the business.

Diane Kelly told Eater Boston that she was postponing the announcement of PURR Cat Cafe's location, but the Boston Globe reported that earlier Facebook comments indicate Kelly was eyeing a Brighton storefront.

Kelly hopes to partner with a Boston animal shelter to help provide an open-air environment for rescue cats outside of a traditional shelter, while giving patrons an opportunity to interact with the cats in a more intimate setting.

"Purr Cafe will be a safe haven for homeless cats until they find their forever home," a statement on the Purr website read. "We will also work diligently to provide a great environment for our hooman [sic] friends to enjoy the company of our cats."

A cat cafe has already opened in New York City. MILES DIXON

Kelly told the Globe last month that she's already spent $25,000 to hire a designer for her website and merchandising, an architect, broker and lawyer to help her through her next hurdle: the permitting and zoning process.

The Globe reported that Kelly plans to partner with a bakery to prepare and deliver baked goods — prepared off-site — in order to provide some food to patrons without running into issues from the health department.

Beyond food, customers would pay a rate — Kelly reportedly paid an estimated $12 to $15 — for access to the animals, and any accompanying good feelings.

"When I first started looking I thought: Am I crazy? Can I really make a living off a cat cafe?" Kelly said, according to the Globe. "And then I did research and I realized I could."

Kelly said she will turn to crowdsourcing for some additional revenue as well. She may have some luck — her Facebook page already has over 1,300 likes. CHRIS CAESAR

Photos suggest China built reinforced hangars on disputed islands

Satellite photographs taken in late July show China appears to have built reinforced aircraft hangars on its holdings in disputed South China Sea islands, a Washington-based research group said.

The hangars on Fiery Cross, Subi and Mischief reefs in the Spratly Islands have room for any fighter jet in the Chinese air force, the Center for Strategic and International Studies (CSIS) said in a report on the photographs.

The images have emerged about a month after an international court in The Hague ruled against China's claims in the resource-rich area, a decision rejected by Beijing. China claims most of the South China Sea, through which $5 trillion in ship-borne trade passes every year. The Philippines, Vietnam, Malaysia, Taiwan and Brunei have overlapping claims.

The United States has urged China and other claimants not to militarize their holdings in the South China Sea.

CSIS said that apart from a brief visit to Fiery Cross Reef by a military transport plane earlier in the year, "there is no evidence that Beijing has deployed military aircraft to these outposts."

The rapid construction of the hangars, however, "indicates that this is likely to change."

A U.S. defense official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said it was unlikely the hangars would be used for civilian purposes.

"It's not like the hangars are for mail planes, they are likely for jets," the official said.

The official added, however, that the Chinese move was seen as skirting around the line rather than crossing it, and there would be increased concern if China actually moved in military aircraft and started using a reef as a forward operating base.

China has repeatedly denied doing so and has in turn criticized U.S. patrols and exercises for ramping up tensions.

"China has indisputable sovereignty over the Spratly Islands and nearby waters," China's Defence Ministry said in a faxed response to a request for comment on Tuesday.

"China has said many times, construction on the Spratly Islands and reefs is multipurpose, mixed, and with the exception of necessary military defensive requirements, are more for serving all forms of civil needs."

The hangars all show signs of structural strengthening, CSIS said. The new images were first reported by the New York Times.

Other facilities including unidentified towers and hexagonal structures have also been built on the islets in recent months, CSIS said.

BRIEF

Putin and Erdogan move toward repairing ties amid tension with West

Russia and Turkey took a big step toward normalizing relations, with their leaders announcing an acceleration in trade and energy ties at a time when both countries have troubled economies and strains with the West.

President Vladimir Putin received his Turkish counterpart Tayyip Erdogan in a Tsarist-era palace outside his home city of St. Petersburg. It was Erdogan's first foreign trip since last month's failed military coup, which left Turkey's relationship with the U.S. and Europe badly damaged.

The visit is being closely watched in the West, where some fear both men, powerful leaders ill-disposed to dissent, might use their rapprochement to exert pressure on Washington and the European Union and stir tensions within NATO, the military alliance of which Turkey is a member.

Putin said Moscow would gradually phase out sanctions against Ankara, imposed after the Turks shot down a Russian fighter jet near the Syrian border nine months ago, and that bringing ties to their precrisis level was the priority. REUTERS

Leslie Jones is going to the Olympics!

After all the hullabaloo over the Rio Olympics being a possible apocalyptic death trap, with polluted water and potential muggings, they've been going pretty smoothly. Even better: Now they're getting Leslie Jones! The "Saturday Night Live" goddess and "Ghostbusters" scene-stealer turns out to be a massive Olympics nerd. She's even repurposed her Twitter feed away from battling racist trolls angry that she's in one of the summer's big movie reboots. Now it's entirely about videos of Olympic might paired with all-caps glee. Her outpouring was so intense that NBC has scooped her up. Later in the week she'll be down in Brazil, joining the on-air hosts in gushing about all the athletic prowess in Rio. That's good for NBC, too: Its coverage tends toward blandly inspirational stories of triumphs of the human spirit and that jazz. It needs someone like Leslie Jones to keep us awake when all it is is tennis matches.

Seth Rogen not totally mad, but still kind of mad at Katherine Heigl

"Sausage Party" star Seth Rogen went on Howard Stern this week to discuss his new film ... and some of his old ones. In the course of the conversation, he unearthed the feud between himself and "Knocked Up" co-star Katherine Heigl.

"I thought she hated us," Rogen says of that "awkward" encounter between the two that Heigl described on the show months earlier. "Like, we made a movie, I was very proud of it. It was critically well-received and, financially, it's probably still my most successful movie. And then we just heard she didn't like it and she didn't have a good experience making it — as someone who was an egomaniac, I thought, 'Oh, she must f—g hate me.'"

Following the release of Judd Apatow's 2007 comedy, Heigl told Vanity Fair that she felt the movie was "a little sexist," saying "it paints the men as lovable, goofy, fun-loving guys ... [while] I'm playing such a bitch." She went on to say she "loved '98 percent" of the experience, but found it hard to enjoy the movie.

Rogen clearly took her words to heart, noting the comments left his "trust feel[ing] very betrayed," and emphasizing his "open process" filmmaking, during which Heigl could have voiced an opinion on at any time.

Regardless, he'd still kick it with her again. "I would make a dozen movies with her," he said. "I would be whatever the s—ty version of Tom Hanks and Meg Ryan is. We had a great dynamic."

Tracy Morgan's second chance

The comedian says he feels "sharper" than ever. GETTY IMAGES

With a fresh start, the comedian won't hold back his humor.

LUKE O'NEIL
@lukeoneil47

Tracy Morgan is a national treasure. If it wasn't always obvious, we were given a reminder last October when the "Saturday Night Live" veteran returned to its hallowed stage for an appearance many thought might never happen. A little over a year before then, Morgan had been involved in a horrific car crash, which took the life of one of his friends and left him terribly injured. But, in returning to "SNL" after a long recovery, it was clear that you can knock a man down, but you can't take away his funny.

Did you find there was a learning curve getting back into doing comedy?

I just had to wipe the rust off; my comedic instincts were still there [and] my timing was still there. I felt sharper, mentally, emotionally, spiritually — all of the things that go into being funny. It was like, I went to heaven, and I sharpened my sword with the kings of comedy. It was awesome.

Are you doing new material?

I'm not concerned with new material. Funny is still new. That was the gift that God gave me — the funny. The gift that God gave me wasn't the material; the gift that God gave me was the funny. Material is the world that we live in, and you have to inject your funny into it.

Speaking of that, the world isn't a very funny place right now. Do you have any thoughts on that?

I leave it all in God's hands. It's a sad thing and the country's grieving like 9/11, but this is all part of the plan. It has to be.

You don't do political stuff too much, but is it that something you touch on stage now?

No, I leave that to the politicians. I stay funny. There's nothing funny about what just happened in the country. I let the politicians deal with it. They started all this mess.

You just did a film with Ed Helms — what was that like? Are you finished filming?

We just finished it and it was beautiful. Ed Helms and the director, Dito [Montiel], those are my brothers in comedy. Everyone in that film was awesome. I hope you enjoy it, and laugh ... and cry. I hope you have the emotions Jimmy Valvano said: laughing, and cry, all in one day. That's Pain, the laughter, the actions, everyday life, the struggle ... the struggle, with life. The human character. I talk about the human condition.

Have you changed the way you approach life?

No, [I keep] injecting my humor into it. I never take it for granted, and any opportunity I have to make [people] laugh, I'll continue.

Do you feel like you've been given a second chance?

Yeah, God [gave me one]. The doctors gave me less than 2 percent chance of living, but God gave me a second chance to live.

Have you always been spiritual?

Always. My dad instilled it in me. I see no reason not to be.

Anna Gunn takes charge

The actress talks about "Equity" and the hurdles women in power face.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

It's hard to believe "Equity" is not only Anna Gunn's first starring role since "Breaking Bad" ended, but her first starring role ever. The actress, 47, spent five seasons as Skyler, wife of chemistry teacher-turned-drug lord Walter White, on the monster hit AMC show. She bided her time looking for her big follow-up, until "Equity" offered a character of equal complexity: Naomi Bishop, an investment banker on Wall Street who tries to protect her latest client from a complicated scheme to undo their hard work.

Were you feeling particularly picky about what you did after "Breaking Bad"?

Absolutely. I felt I had been on such an extraordinary journey with extraordinary material. It opened a lot of doors; I wanted to make sure I walked through the right ones. I'd never come across a role this rich and complex, and where the character was at the forefront of the story.

And the creators and co-receivers were these two women. The director was a woman, the writer was a woman. It's obviously a very unusual situation, and long past due.

The film says a lot about what it's like to be a woman in power today.

I agree. In the research process — which I always say is one of my favorite parts about acting — I got to talk to Barbara Byrne, who is on Wall Street and is one of the film's investors. She gave me a wealth of information. One of the things she said is when you're a known commodity on Wall Street, you feel your gender more. Any time there's been something on the news [about her], she walks into the office and there's a sea of men. She thinks, "Are they talking about me? Is this going to put me in a bad position?" But she's a confident woman.

There's a parallel there with Hillary Clinton.

There's so much negativity and criticism of her, but then you see how much she's done. People focus more on the negative side than the positive.

They certainly do. That's

Anna Gunn plays an investment banker trying to protect her client in "Equity," in theaters Friday. SONY PICTURES CLASSICS; GETTY IMAGES something women experience across the board in every profession. We're seeing [Clinton's] qualifications, her intellect, her policies, her track record. But everyone thinks, "Let's not focus on that, let's focus on the way she dresses or wears her hair." That's something Barbara said women have to think about a lot more than men. She picks out the color of her suit depending on the client she's dealing with. Maybe they're dealing with someone who prefers a pink suit. On another day you might need to wear that red power dress. That's something that doesn't come into play with men. People aren't tweeting and blogging about men's choice of suits the next day. [Laughs]

There's still a lot of pushback from certain types, who are hopefully the last bastions of a dying culture.

I certainly have seen that, from playing Skyler. [Laughs] That's why I wrote that op-ed [in The New York Times, about people voicing their hate of Skyler], because I'd been asked about it a million times and I had tried to be diplomatic about it. Eventually I wanted to say what I wanted to say. I felt it was important, because I have two daughters and I want them to know that when they grow up and go on their way that if they have something to say they should say it. Don't let anyone push you back. Keep moving forward with your goals.

You're not still getting angry messages from people watching "Breaking Bad," I hope. No. I learned my lesson, which is you don't read that stuff. And by the way, no one ever came up to me and said the things they said on the internet. [Laughs]

Saving food can save lives

Food Rescue Challenge addresses Boston's food-waste and hunger problem.

NINA JOUNGH
nina.joungh@metro.us

Forty percent of food made for consumption is going uneaten for reasons like oversupply and aesthetic standards for produce. To challenge that, Three Squares New England, a grassroots organization that supports hunger relief agencies in the greater Boston area, is organizing its first Ultimate Food Rescue Challenge. For one evening, people can savor meals with rescued food and get a taste of the food-waste and hunger problem in the Boston area.

For the challenge, the chefs know only a few things about their ingredients: There will be donated grass-fed beef from Verde Farms, poultry from food rescue nonprofit Food Link and about 75 pounds of produce from Russo's, a family grocery store in Watertown. According to Three Squares Executive Director Kati Sigel, the challenge is innovating with the quality and quantity of the unknown produce and meat cuts to create a fine-dining experience for around 100 people.

For participating Chef Frank van Overbeeke, working with rescued food is a challenge he's quite familiar with. As the head chef of Pine Street Inn, a shelter that provides services to the homeless, van Overbeeke's kitchen uses rescued food on a daily basis. "It allows my cooks to be a little creative," he says. "I never know what I'm going to receive, so we kind of have to figure it out when it shows up."

Van Overbeeke will be joined by other local chefs such as Ismail Samad, executive chef at the non-profit grocery store and cafe Daily Table that also uses rescued food, and Joe Gatto, whose new show, "From Scratch," encourages viewers to cook from scratch with local ingredients. "It'll be kind of fun to share our experience on how we process and manage our food," van Overbeeke adds.

Sigel is excited to have the locally based chefs represent the collaborative effort of reducing food waste and addressing a hunger problem that affects one out of nine members of the Eastern Massachusetts community. She says, "The main aspect [of the Food Rescue Challenge] is these chefs want to be out in the crowd to mingle, answer questions and show everybody that there's good food in surplus or left on the field that's healthy and delicious and should be eaten — not abandoned."

Tips to cook rescued food

Want to save food at home? Try these five rescued-food cooking tips from Chef Frank van Overbeeke to save fruits and veggies past their prime.

- Make stir fry. You can throw everything in them, so leave no vegetable behind!
- Flavor things up! Spices can take the place of expensive ingredients.
- Any vegetable can be pickled. Plus, it'll make them last longer.
- Make a puree or sauce with bruised or soft fruit. A drizzle will give your meat or fish dish more color.
- Roast them and add vinaigrette. So simple, yet so delicious.

The event will take place at French bistro Les Zygomates, where guests can enjoy live music and a live auction.

This robot helps your garden grow

FarmBot takes care of chores like weeding and watering, leaving you to sit back and relax.

DANIEL CASILLAS
Metro World News
letters@metro.us

Green-fingered robots are coming to a garden near you. Yes, the FarmBot Genesis, developed by a team of three based in California, can sow seeds, weed and water with unrivalled precision. The Genesis, which measures 1.5 by 3 meters, slides along tracks installed either side of raised beds. The gizmo can move side to side, up and down, and forward and back, while

Now you can know exactly how your garden grows. PROVIDED the main arm of the bot performs the planting, weeding and watering tasks. FarmBot is connected to a web app resembling Farmville, where the user lays out what they want to plant, such as potatoes, peas and artichokes. The robot then spaces these plants at exactly the correct distances and can even monitor weather conditions. Nothing is left to chance. FarmBot founder Rory Aronson explains why this robot will revolutionize gardening.

Why did you decide to create a robot to do the gardening?
The idea came to me when I took an organic agriculture class in college. A local farmer came to talk with us about his latest tractor technology. I thought to myself, "That's cool, but where is the high-tech farming equipment for the home gardener?" FarmBot is my answer to that question.

How does FarmBot work?
FarmBot works like a very large 3-D printer but instead of extruding plastic, it plants seeds, waters them and uses sensors to learn about the soil, plants and environment in order to farm smarter over time.

Could this robot help to plant food in poor places?
Not right now. FarmBot is fairly expensive equipment at this time. Most poor people have lots of time, but not lots of money. Whereas people with more money usually have very little time. Over time we hope to bring the cost of FarmBot down.

How can FarmBot help the environment?
By our analysis, FarmBot-grown veggies emit 30 percent less CO2 than average U.S. veggies bought at the supermarket.

What kind of technological improvements will the crowdsourcing campaign fund?
We will continue to develop new tooling and more software features, as well as reach economies of scale that can help bring the cost down for future versions.

Prep for the movepocalypse

The Sept. 1 move is a Boston tradition. Corresponding with a deluge of university students returning for the fall semester and moving off-campus or switching apartments, the day sees thousands of Bostonians in transit, navigating their new neighborhoods in brimming U-Hauls from dawn till dusk. For the unprepared with a Sept. 1 lease start date, this can be a nightmare. Starting now, here are three things you can do to preserve your sanity.

1 Register parking for your van.

If your destination doesn't have a driveway, reserving a parking spot in front of it can shave time and keep your blood pressure out of the danger zone. Head to boston.gov's moving guide and follow the steps to get a permit online or in person. The base fee is $50, plus $20 a day if you're taking up a metered spot;

You might be overpacked, but don't be underprepared. iStock you should also post fliers on the block at least two days before you move to let your new neighbors know the space is yours for the day.

2 See if you can move in earlier.

If the traffic isn't enough to deter you, a report from apartment and renting app Sumu finds that the average cost of a moving company in the Boston area surges just before Sept. 1. Consider reaching out to the current tenants in your new place. They might offer to move out earlier if, say, they have vacation plans for the last week of August.

3 Plan to avoid disaster on Storrow.

Google "Storowing" or ask anyone who's had the top of their moving truck peeled back by any one of the low-hanging overpasses. Chose a cargo van or a 10-foot truck if your moving journey takes you along Storow (or Memorial Drive, on the other side of the Charles); if you can't downsize, avoid these roads altogether.

3 Things to watch for as Patriots face Saints

Jimmy Garoppolo needs to look solid on Thursday.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

One could easily make the case that this is the most important, or at least most intriguing, preseason in the history of the New England Patriots.

Most preseason games in the Bill Belichick era have been snooze-fests, as the team runs vanilla plays against vanilla defenses. The main takeaways from most of these games have revolved around injuries and the potential for injuries. The biggest debate after most Pats preseason games in the past 14 years has been, "Did Belichick leave Brady in too long?"

All that changes Thursday night in Foxboro when the Patriots host the New Orleans Saints (7:30 p.m., WBZ). It will be absolutely fascinating to see how Jimmy Garop-polo — who will start the first four games of the 2016 regular season due to Tom Brady's Deflategate suspension — plays when there are true repercussions. If Garoppolo lays a dud against what was statistically the worst defense in the NFL last season (New Orleans allowed a whopping 29.8 points per game in 2015), there will be panic in the streets.

Here are three things to watch for Thursday:

1 The guy under center (duh)

Garoppolo hasn't looked great in training camp by most indications and he was picked off in a two-minute drill in a practice session against the Saints on Wednesday. (To be fair, Brady was picked off in 11-on-11 work as well.)

If there has been a trend surrounding Garoppolo in his previous two NFL preseasons however, it's that he has often looked shaky during practices but he steps up when the lights are on. In the first preseason game against the Packers last year, Garoppolo hit on 20-of-30 passes for 159 yards, zero TDs and one interception. In the next 2015 preseason game, Garoppolo went 28-of-33 for 269 yards, one touchdown and one TD. In preseason game No. 3 against Carolina, he went 13-of-17 for 126 yards, one TD and zero INTs. He did not throw a ball in the fourth preseason game against the Giants. In the 2014 preseason, Garoppolo completed 46-of-79 passes total for 618 yards, five touchdowns and one INT. He finished that preseason with a 99.0 passer rating.

2 Brady, the backup

Brady and Garoppolo have more or less split reps in training camp, so it will be interesting to see how Belichick uses No. 12 in this game and the three preseason games that follow. Knowing Belichick, he'll do something odd like play

Brady the entire game — or sit him the entire game. If Brady does play, however, don't expect him to light the world on fire. He is never himself in these preseason games as evidenced by last year's performances during the height of Deflategate. Remember, that was a time when people thought he was going to go all scorched earth and run up scores during exhibitions. Instead, he had a miserable 37.5 passer rating in the three preseason games played.

3 New toys

It will be the first chance for Patriots fans to see new tight end Martellus Bennett line up with Rob Gronkowski in something resembling game action. The duo has the potential to be one of the most formidable tight end duos in league history, so it would be fun to see a sneak preview of the damage they can cause.

New running back Donald Brown could open some eyes as well. The 29-year-old Brown is just three seasons removed from a campaign with the Colts in which he found the end zone six times and rushed for 537 yards on 102 carries. Brown has rushed for 2,829 yards in his seven-year NFL career.

Avoid BIG-NAME QBs EARLY

FANTASY SPORTS

ADAM LEVITAN
alevitan@metro.us

Cam Newton, Aaron Rodgers and Russell Wilson are elite NFL quarterbacks. Using an early- or even midround fantasy pick on them is a high-level mistake.

If you're in a standard one-QB league, which awards at least a half-point for a reception and only four points for a passing TD, employing a late-round quarterback strategy will yield a lot of rewards. First of all, we will stack up depth at positions where injuries are far more frequent and bust rates are far higher. Additionally, quarterback production is relatively predictable compared with other positions. And most important, there is way more supply at the quarterback position than demand: 21 quarterbacks outscored the No. 2 RB (Adrian Peterson) last season and the difference between the No. 24 QB (Ryan Tannehill) vs. the No. 2 QB (Tom Brady) was a mere 5.0 fantasy points per game.

Once you commit to waiting as long as possible for your quarterback, your draft plan will clear up quickly. Here are some QBs available late in drafts with big upside:

We like that

In the 24 games Kirk Cousins has started and finished, he's averaged 279.8 passing yards per game. That would be good for second all-time, behind only Drew Brees. Cousins has gone over 300 yards passing 12 times in his 26 career starts, a rate that's better than Rodgers, Peyton Manning and Brees. So even though Cousins will throw interceptions, they'll quickly become water under the bridge as he racks up stats via DeSean Jackson, Jordan Reed,

Stay away from guys like Cam Newton, at least in the early rounds of your draft. GETTY IMAGES

Pierre Garcon and Josh Doctson. He's a serious candidate to lead the NFL in passing yards yet he's consistently available in Rounds 11 or 12 of fantasy drafts.

Remember the running

Marcus Mariota averaged 0.51 fantasy points per dropback last year, eight-best in the league and a better rate than Brees, Blake Bortles, Eli Manning and Ben Roethlisberger. He did it despite averaging just 2.8 rushes per game as the Titans tried to protect their investment. With Mariota's knees healthy and Mike Mularkey taking over on a full-time basis, we can expect more designed and improvised runs from the quarterback position. Mariota also quietly has a very high ceiling with his arm, as evidenced by four 3-TD games among the 12 he started as a rookie last year.

Bob and Brock

Brock Osweiler landed in an ideal situation with the Texans. He'll be coached by QB guru Bill O'Brien, who made Christian Hackenberg look like one of the best players in the country as a true freshman at Penn State and made Brian Hoyer fantasy viable. Osweiler will operate in one of the league's fastest-paced offenses and have serious weaponry with DeAndre Hopkins/Will Fuller/Jaelen Strong. And finally, Osweiler will get six games against the leaky defenses of the Jags, Titans and Colts. It's a streamer's delight.

Aries Legal or financial contracts are highlighted. Negotiate on your own behalf. An idea you have will change the way you move forward professionally.

Taurus Do whatever feels right. It's a good time to turn an idea into a going concern. Make plans to celebrate with someone you love. Playtime will ease stress.

Gemini Proceed with caution. Get information firsthand. If you rely on someone else, you will be disappointed. It's up to you to bring about positive change.

Cancer The lifestyle changes you make will encourage you to get back to the people and activities that you enjoy the most. Set the stage for a romantic interlude or a fun-filled day.

Leo Emotions will surface, causing problems at home if you aren't cognizant of what those around you want. Do your best to please others without ignoring your needs.

Virgo Don't leave anything to chance. Make domestic changes and use your money wisely. Compassion and understanding are sufficient when dealing with outsiders.

Libra Get your chores out of the way and make the adjustments that will ensure you get to do something enjoyable before the end of the day. Don't divulge a secret.

Scorpio Set the standard. Share your intentions and move forward with or without the help of others. Trust and believe in yourself and your talents.

Sagittarius Refuse to let anyone guilt you into doing things you don't want to do. Arguing is a waste of time. If you don't like something or someone, walk away. Work on self-improvement.

Capricorn Listen to any tips or suggestions being offered in order to find a unique way to deal with a perplexing situation. Your timing will be uncanny. Love is in the stars.

Aquarius Keep an open mind, but don't let anyone use emotional manipulation on you. If something doesn't feel right, do your own thing. Personal change will lead to interesting results.

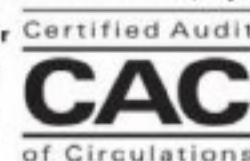

Pisces Someone you have dealt with in the past will be your ticket to a new beginning. Don't hesitate to reconnect and make an offer that's impossible to refuse. EUGENIA LAST
